SIX THOUSAND.

List of Dead Grows Longer as
The Debris Is Cleared Away.

Nearly 2,000 Unidentified Bodies
Burned—One Sixth of The Population Killed.

Galveston, Tex., Sept. 17.—Of Galveston's population of 38,000, 6000 were killed.

The area of total destruction was 1300 acres.

There were 5000 dwellings, hotels, churches and convents utterly destroyed.

More than 1500 bodies have been burned.

The property loss is not less than $15,000,000.

One hundred and twenty-five men, most of them negroes, were shot to death for robbing the dead.

Out of this disaster, unparalleled in the history of the nation, Galveston is rising to reclaim her place among the most prosperous of our cities.

Her railroads have pledged themselves to aid in rebuilding the city.

Her merchants are resolute to resume business. Her banks are ready to assist in the re-establishment of commerce and outside capital is flowing in.

The greatest need of the hour is not money, but disinfectants by the ton, so that workmen may bear to work among the ruins.

The Measure of Aid Required.

What measure of aid Galveston requires is here presented:

There were 38,000 persons in the city when the census was taken a few weeks ago. After the storm 32,000 remained. Three thousand have left since.

How many must be helped and how long? The men who know most of the situation, who have lived in it day and night since Sunday, hesitate to answer. Mr. McVettie, the executive head of the relief work, says there are not 3500 people in the city who do not require assistance. Mr. Lowe of the Galveston News says he believes that fully two-thirds of the surviving population are dependent today.

The conclusion is forced that there are today in Galveston over 20,000 people on thereabouts who must be helped.

Those who can stay will do so if the country responds to the needs in anything like the measure given to Johnstown, to Chicago, to Charleston and to other stricken cities and sections.

Everybody Has Gone to Work.

Conditions here continue to improve amazingly fast. The manner in which the country responded, when the magnitude of the tragedy was realized, has lifted Galveston from the depths of depression to the heights of hope.

Everybody is at work. Three thousand men are laboring under command of the citizens' committee on general cleaning. The streets are full of stock from the stores, being dried. Everybody is trying to save something.

Women are making desperate efforts to rescue their household effects, yards are filled with mattresses and clothing, everywhere is evidence of a fixed determination to dry out and rise, squads are at work all over town, cleaning up the debris. One leader has 600 men under him. He gives them food and clothes, and is feeding 3700 persons in his district. Nobody is paid money or expects it.

"They who will not work should not eat," was the principle adopted when the organization was perfected. Today few idle mouths are being fed in Galveston.

The odor of carbolic acid is everywhere. Teams can go through most of the streets gathering up the debris, which is being burned as fast as collected. Delicate care has been taken to burn the human bodies on different pyres from those used for the carcasses of animals. There are 100 of these pyres.
